

URBAN FARMING BUILDS HEALTHY COMMUNITIES

VanDusen's 2018 Vegetable Garden supports the goals of the City of Vancouver's Greenest City Action Plan, which includes becoming a global leader in urban food systems by 2020.

Envisioned to inspire residents to grow their own food, this garden was designed by Camil Dumont, founder of the Inner City Farms Society. This organization partners Vancouver residents with urban farmers to grow organic vegetables on private properties and share the harvest with those in need.

Urban farms and community gardens bring people together, produce healthier food and reduce the environmental impacts of large scale food production.

QUESTIONS?

Ask Camil. Look for him in the Vegetable Garden on Thursdays and Fridays throughout the summer.

We thank the City of Vancouver's Greenest City Action Plan and Vancouver Master Gardeners for generously supporting this project.

Photo credit: Adam Blasberg